

Keep-with-next across a page boundary

The heading below declares nothing of its own: `h1–h6 { break-after: avoid }` is the user-agent print default. Its section body asks not to be broken and starts a line above the page boundary, with 410pt of filler above it.

Filler

A heading that must not be stranded

Sentence 1 of the section body, long enough to occupy a line of its own. Sentence 2 of the section body, long enough to occupy a line of its own. Sentence 3 of the section body, long enough to occupy a line of its own. Sentence 4 of the section body, long enough to occupy a line of its own. Sentence 5 of the section body, long enough to occupy a line of its own.

Going back to a pass that stopped mid-paragraph

The running text below breaks across the page boundary, so the pass that placed the first heading under it started inside that paragraph rather than at a page top. Each heading still arrives with its own section body.
