

Chapter 1: Introduction

Unlike `string-set/string()` (previous showcase), which captures plain text only, `position: running()` removes this whole heading from the flow and `content: element()` shows it in the margin box complete with its own formatting - the blue "Ch. 1" badge and italic title are real, laid-out elements, not captured strings.

Chapter 2: Methodology

The running header updates to the new chapter's badge and title as soon as this heading is encountered - the same first/start/last/first-except selection rules `string()` already offers, applied to a whole element instead of a string.
